

Field Labs (FL) requirements

Students in FL formats must follow specific rules, below.

Equity Research students should also consider specific guidelines sent by their advisors.

There are two different types of Field Labs:

- A) Umbrella FL –students develop individual work entirely, but with group-based supervision meetings for the same “umbrella” topic (with no common contribution).
- B) Regular FL -Team-based FL - the most common format - students develop both group and individual work, i.e., group contribution and individual contribution.

A) Instructions for students in an Umbrella FL

Students enrolled in this format will follow the same formatting and submission rules as students taking the Directed Research or Directed Research Internship format.

- Each student submits her/his own final report (before and after the defense).
- Students defend together

B) Instructions for students in a Regular FL

a. Structure of the FL report

- Each FL should have a number of pages equivalent to 25 pages times the number of students, comprising two parts: an individual contribution and a group contribution.
- 15 pages are recommended for individual work. However, the supervisor may decide on a range of 10 to 15 pages of individual work, 10 pages being the minimum.
- The collective work will then be equal to the difference of the individual number of pages to 25 total number of pages per student, times the number of students. This is: $(25 - \text{individual pages}) \times n$, n being the number of students in the FL. Example: in a FL with five students, assuming 15 pages for individual work per student, the collective work will be $10 \text{ pages} \times 5 \text{ (students)} = 50 \text{ pages}$ for collective work.

b. Output for the individual contribution

- Each individual contribution must be a readable, coherent and original piece of work, written independently of the group contribution. It cannot repeat the individual contribution developed by others.
- The individual work should have a strong individual contribution to the topic - it doesn't stand as a summary of the collective part.

c. Delivering of the Final WP in a Regular FL

Before the Defense

- For final submission purposes (via Student App/ Turnitin Reports), one member of the group must submit the whole document comprising the individual contributions from all students, as well as the collective contribution. The other members of that group should not submit any document at this stage.
- Because the School will not permit submissions after the established deadline, and only one of you will submit the report, it is of paramount importance that you are duly organized and establish clear timings among yourselves to meet this strict deadline.
- This single PDF document must be structured with a coherent and logical sequence
- The different sections must be clearly distinguished:
 - a. The group component must be marked with the header “Group part”
 - b. The individual components must be marked with a header with the name of the student responsible for that part
- Components of the document:
 - a. ID cover page (a support document for the jury members before the defense, with information about the WP team) – template attached – this page will only be used for the defense jury members
 - b. General cover page – according to the Nova SBE WP template (attached) – with the FL-WP general title and the Individual subtitles of each student / with the names of all members of the group
 - c. General abstract page - according to the Nova SBE WP template (attached) – with the summary of the group part and of the individual parts of each student (at this stage it can exceed 100 words)

- d. Body of the FL-WP report – group contribution (header “Group part”) + individual contribution of each student (header with the name of the student)
- e. References and appendices of the whole WP_FL report (group part and individual parts).

Note: The sequence presented is an example. Students can structure the group and individual parts in a different way as well as the references and appendices.

FL group must inform the WP team in case one member of the group fails to submit their individual component, meaning that the student defense will be canceled. In this case the group should remove the name of the respective student from the report.

After the Defense

- A Final WP report must also be submitted after the defense takes place, in order to officially register the document in the University thesis database \(RUN\).
- At this stage, each student will be submitting her/his own master’s thesis, comprising the group component (or a summary) and her/his individual contribution. This WP needs to be self-contained in terms of understandability for any potential external reader. The cover page must have only the name of the respective author with a general title and a unique subtitle related to the individual work. The abstract page must have a summary of the individual part and the group component. References and appendixes of the group work and the individual work.

d. During the defense

For defense purposes, although the presentation is team-based, each student must also present their individual contribution. Usually there is a recommended 10-minute slot per student, followed by a discussion/Q&A. Group must decide on order of each presentation beforehand.

Please refer to the WP Sharepoint for more details regarding the defense (section Public Defense).
